From the Director

Charleston's tech community is growing and thriving! Blackbaud recently dedicated their new corporate HQ building; Phishlabs raised additional funds and acquired a competitor, BrandProtect; the Charleston Technology Center received unanimous conceptual approval from the City's Board of Architectural Review; the College of Charleston graduated more computer science students and Charleston has grabbed a bunch of accolades. All good stuff. No hype!

TALENT

CharlestonWorks (update)

We listened! Our popular CharlestonWorks has once again been updated to improve functionality and user experience. You can now manage your company listing and job vacancies - no middle man. Be sure to get more eyes on your open positions and company by posting your job today!

CODEcamp Kids - Summer Camp

The Charleston Digital Corridor was once again pleased to host middle school kids this summer for our CODEcamp Kids CS Upstart program, a week-long, half-day camp designed to promote an interest in computer science and tech careers while expanding on the core STEM concepts from their other classes throughout the school year. Judging from the pics, the kids had a great time while learning some important computer science concepts.

SPACES

Flagships

The Flagships continue to be the go-to place for early-stage tech companies in Charleston. Several of our recent companies have grown and graduated so we have a spot or two open for tech startups. Visit our website to check availability or ping us for a tour and pricing.

Speaking of the Flagships, our proposed new home overcame a hurdle by winning unanimous conceptual approval from the Charleston Board of Architectural Review. Flagship3 will anchor the Charleston Technology Center, a building being developed for start-up to growth-stage tech companies + corporate expansions/relocations.

CAPITAL

Capital Update

Charleston's tech companies continue to raise capital to drive growth. To date, companies in residence at the Flagships and our graduates have raised over $255 million, including Phishlabs, Commit Good, and Snag.

Did You Know?

RentCafé ranked Charleston 3rd most prosperous city in the U.S.
